The Interim Data Protection Officer (DPO)

The General Data Protection Regulation obliges many organizations to appoint a Data Protection Officer (hereinafter: DPO). The DPO must be knowledgeable and independent. Do you need a DPO temporarily? Or do you want to use a specialist during the implementation phase of the privacy legislation and then transfer the baton? Our team of AVG Juristen are ready to temporarily fill this position. In this way you meet the legal requirements and you are assured of pragmatic and expert advice.

When is an DPO required?

With the GDPR entered into force, organizations that process special personal data on a large scale are obliged to appoint a DPO.

The duty to appoint a DPO applies in any case to:

- governments and public organizations;
- schools;
- healthcare organizations;
- IT organizations that process a lot of data from customers.

The benefits of an Interim DPO

- AVG Juristen knows your industry and is capable of independently performing the duties of the DPO, such as:
- Supervising the application of and compliance with privacy regulations;
- Assessing and updating of data processing;
- Registration and handling of data breaches;
- Handling internal and external questions;
- Advising regarding processes, applications, information security and projects;
- Reporting and accountability to the board or management.

The benefits of outsourcing:

- an interim DPO can be deployed flexibly;
- no costs for (additional) training;
- a sufficient level of knowledge is guaranteed;
- the required independence is insured;
- improved efficiency through knowledge cross-pollination;
- widely applicable support.
